The patient has Fabry disease. The typical adult manifestations include stroke and renal or heart disease. The most common heart disease finding is moderate concentric hypertrophy, which can be confused with hypertrophic cardiomyopathy. Recognition of this disease is important due to its specific treatment.