ECG de enero de 2016

Pablo Merás Colunga

Servicio de Cardiología, Hospital Universitario La Paz, Madrid, Spain

An 89-year-old woman, with a past history of arterial hypertension, Graves disease, and paroxysmal atrial fibrillation, with preserved ventricular function on her last echocardiogram, presented to the emergency department with palpitations, with good hemodynamic tolerance. On arrival, ECG 1 was performed (Figure 1). Shortly after, the tracing of ECG 2 was recorded (Figure 2).
